Rather more than that should be said for Ralph Dyar's play which has been worked over to some extent by Willard Mack. The comedy interest is much more legitimate than that of the other two mystery plays in town. It is introduced more easily and scores better for that reason. One does not feel the strain of openly premeditated comic reformer in the reason. One does not feel the strain of openly premeditated comic relief. In particular, a scene between two detectives, one a Pinkerton and the other "working for the city," was decidedly amusing. It was well played by Frank Monroe and John Sharkey.

Not all the humor was intentional. Perhaps the best line in the piece occurred in a sericus scene, in which a much hounded young woman said: "I will smother my pride and go to Chicago."

This case has now passed through cago."

The play is exciting and generally workmanlike, although a few loose ends have been left lying about. The best dramatic opportunity of the evening is not quite carried to the limit. One man in the nicce finds from the blind man's story that if he speaks he will be identified as being connected with the crime. A simple question is asked him, and he is in torment to avoid recognition on the part of the blind man. This is good theatre stuff and it ought not to be allowed to slide by quite as quickly as it does in "A Voice in the Dark." The acting is generally good, with the interesting work being done by William B. Mack, Olive Wyndham. Frank Monroe, John Sharkey Florine Arnold, Anne Sutherland and William Boyd.

This case has now passed through the Appellate Division, which held that the hearing was lawful, and gave that the hearing was lawful, and gave an obiter dictum construing the that the hearing was lawful, and gave and obiter dictum construing the that the hearing was lawful, and gave an obiter dictum construing the that the hearing was lawful, and gave article showing the confusion and sequibling over the control of New York's schools, actually confirmed it tack on Superintendent Ettinger and Att. ack on Superintendent Ettinger and Auditor Cook.

The Mayor said:

"This tack on Superintendent Ettinger and Auditor Cook.

The Mayor said:

"That story is nothing more than a lot of bunk—manufactured out of whole cloth. No doubt it is inspired by a few gentlemen who attempted to run the schools as a private enterprise for their especial benefit. Having failed, they now seek to give the other hand, declares the issue is merely one of bookkeeping; that the other hand, declares the issue is merely one of bookkeeping; that the other hand, declares the issue is merely one of bookkeeping; that the other hand, declares the issue is merely one of bookkeeping; that the control of New York's schools, actually confirmed it ack on Superintendent Ettinger and Auditor Cook.

The Mayor city in practice always gives the schools more money than the state fund would amount to, and that the From Operation in Paris schools will not get a cent more or of the books of the school auditor, under instructions from Mayor Hylan, This was resisted by Auditor Cook, under instructions from Superintendent Ettinger, on the ground that the city authorities were assuming an unlawful authority. Later an invitation to Hirschfield to make his investigation by permission of the school board was refused by the Commissioner on the ground that he had a legal right to do the work. This case also has been passed on by the Appellate Division, which denied that Hirshfield had the right he claimed.

In this case, the school executives believe, is involved the whole question of the power of the city nuthorities and they declare that a final decision favorable to them will establish their right to independence. The city authorities deny that the issue is anything like so broad. The only question involved, they say, is the right of this particular officer, and the power of the Board of Estimate and Controller is not affected. Moreover, they contend that even if all their powers were denied, they would still be able to make the examination they desire under the law which gives the taxpayers the right to examine any public ac-

The Mayor's Reasons

The Mayor's reasons for ordering this inquiry are interesting. He had long been in dispute with the school authorities over various matters, and in particular had attacked the executives. The quarrel with the Controller over the rendering and classification

Finally, on January 17 of this year, Hylan wrote Hirshfield to make an examination "so that the officials charged with the responsibility of appropriating funds to the Board of Education might have the necessary information as to whether this money has been spent in accordance with the dency toward optimism at this stage of the season, it is difficult to find exhibitantion in this new musical comedy. It is not only compounded of familiar materials, but of materials that have been used far more skilfully before. Indeed, it gives the impression that all the scraps and shavings and left-over materials of past and gone successes have gone into its makeup.

The plot is of the variety which may be termed serviceable, and all the appurtanances thereto belong in the same category. Deacon Titmouse,

He opposes his nephew's marriage to an actuess, but is brought marriage to an actuess, but is brought to terms when he is exposed on one of these carousals before his wife, who is the leader of the temperance society. It is apparent that a plot of this sort need not involve a great amount of ingenuity. Like most musical comedies, the piece depends a good deal on its pace for success, and, while this is fairly rapid, it is not clear-cut. Most of the comedy seenes, especially the one in which the temperance lady is made drunk, are of the

There are several specialties and interpolations which, if they do not make up for the almost complete absence of funny lines, at least fill large gaps when the interest flags. Frank Fay has been lifted out of vaudeville to play a leading part—that of the resourceful friend who stages the complications. He plays a slangy, flip, Broadway rounder with a good deal of assurance, but with no particular gift of humor. But Harry Kelly, who plays the deacon, draws his characterization from a genuine abundant source of humor. Nothing could be more hackneyed
